CHEF'S SPECIAL

We didn't know we needed a modular cooktop until Fisher & Paykel introduced its new collection – and now, of course, it makes great sense! Giving you the ability to design your ideal hob configuration, it's just the thing for compact kitchens – and, of course, for keen chefs who would like to build their ultimate cooking station. Series 11 modular cooktop range, from £3,500, Fisher & Paykel

COCKTAIL HOUR

You've already seen that the home bar is the must-have kitchen trend of 2024, and we're looking to get in on the action with one of Hux's incredible new freestanding versions. The bespoke bar pictured here features dark stained ash, reeded glass and glossy emerald porcelain, with fabulous Art Deco flourishes and illuminated interiors. We love the combination of open and closed storage so you can display your fanciest cocktail glasses and carefully curated wine collection (and hide away the more boring bottles of soda). Custom home bar, £37,500, Hux

TAILOR MADE

There are many reasons to turn to Neptune for your next kitchen renovation – one being their Henley kitchen range. Crafted from timber, it's surprisingly versatile in that you can pick between a solid oak or painted cabinet finish – or even mix and match for a space that's tailored completely to you. Henley kitchen in Dove Grey/Lead Light, from £20,000; Stratford round dining table, £1,950, Neptune

DOUBLE TAKE

The ideal blend of aesthetics and utility, the new Hawkshaw sink from Shaws of Darwen features an apron front and double bowl designed to make kitchen tasks a little easier. The dividing wall between the bowls is offset to allow for a larger side, and at 10cm high, it's tall enough to keep the smaller side separate (handy if you want to clean vegetables while washing up, for example), but short enough so that you can still fill up the whole bowl to scrub larger pans and roasting trays. The perfect multifunctional investment. Hawkshaw sink, from £1,078.80 for 800mm design, Shaws of Darwen
