If you're lacking a pantry, it's easy enough to DIY using modular furniture. Here, a rustic piece (the Earth open shelving unit) provides room for ingredients and crockery. Decanting some dried goods into glass jars makes the display feel less cluttered and overwhelming. furniturevillage.co.uk

This simple (and enviable) setup is achieved just by wall-mounting a series of bottle racks. It's a great use of space for that often neglected spot under the stairs. Matt black looks cool and industrial, but this would also work with plain wooden racks or brightly coloured versions. hux-london.co.uk

A pantry with a secret... The corner of this kitchen has been sacrificed to form an extensive pantry with plenty of open shelving. There's also a petite sink installed above a run of drawers, making this the ideal spot for mixing a quiet drink. Bold tiles and gold hardware just add to the fun. martinmoore.com

Of course, sometimes there's no beating the standard kitchen cupboard. Even this relatively simple layout features drawers and nooks hidden away within the tall cabinets. Corner shelves allow for treasured crockery to be displayed, freeing up worktop space for a stand mixer. benchmarkkitchens.co.uk
